Dr Dejan Fiser
Medical One

Dear Dr Fiser,

Re: Mr Jinyoung Hong
DOB: 1992-01-03
Address: Unit 1102/50 Albert Road, SOUTH MELBOURNE VIC 3205

Summary

- Improvement in symptoms of gastro-oesophageal reflux and functional dyspepsia on a de-escalated dose of rabeprazole.
- Stability of symptoms including reduced heartburn, globus sensation, and epigastric pain.
- Planned transition of rabeprazole to an alternate-day regimen in three months' time.
- No action required by you.

I had the pleasure of conducting a telehealth review with Travis. He has successfully reduced his dose of rabeprazole from 20 mg down to 10 mg daily. Reassuringly, he did not experience any significant rebound symptoms during this transition.

Travis reports that his symptoms of heartburn, globus sensation, and epigastric pain have improved. His symptoms of bloating and eructation have also decreased in both frequency and severity. He does continue to experience a sour taste in his mouth, typically noted prior to dinner. He has been consciously reducing his meal portions to mitigate his symptoms and manage the reduction in his proton pump inhibitor (PPI) dose, which has resulted in a minor weight loss of approximately 700 grams. He remains on a stable dose of 10 mg of nortriptyline.

From a dietary perspective, Travis continues to avoid acidic and spicy triggers. While he has some restrictions regarding his choice of beverages and fruit, he expresses that he is not distressed by these limitations and is generally satisfied with his current dietary intake. He intends to slightly increase his caloric intake now that his symptoms have stabilised to maintain his weight.

Impression and Plan

The current clinical picture is one of stability. The goal remains to eventually wean Travis off his medications if symptoms remain durable. I have advised him to continue with 10 mg of rabeprazole and 10 mg of nortriptyline daily for the next three months. If he remains well, he will then attempt to further de-escalate the rabeprazole to 10 mg every second day. I have provided him with repeat prescriptions for both medications and will review his progress in six months' time.

Kind regards

Yours sincerely,
