Summary

- Resolution of dyspeptic symptoms following a course of esomeprazole.
- CT scan confirming adenomyomatosis of the gallbladder.
- Referral for non-urgent gastroscopy via the public waitlist for diagnostic certainty.
- Surveillance gallbladder ultrasound in 12 months.
- Action requested of you: Please arrange a surveillance gallbladder ultrasound in 12 months' time.

I had the pleasure of conducting a review with Carlos. I am pleased to report that his symptoms have significantly improved. Although he has been off esomeprazole for the past fortnight, his symptoms remain minimal and manageable. He previously noted that while a nocturnal dose was insufficient, a twice-daily regimen successfully resolved his discomfort. He currently only experiences very mild, occasional symptoms following significant dietary triggers.

Regarding his imaging, the recent CT scan confirmed the findings of the earlier ultrasound, identifying gallbladder adenomyomatosis. While historical data suggested a slight correlation between this condition and gallbladder malignancy, contemporary studies are more reassuring. To ensure clinical stability, I have recommended serial imaging rather than immediate intervention. A repeat USS in 12 months would be adequate.

Given his current symptomatic improvement and the absence of red-flag features such as weight loss or haematemesis, a gastroscopy is not urgent. However, we have decided to proceed with a non-urgent gastroscopy via the public system. This is intended to provide diagnostic certainty and exclude underlying peptic ulcer disease, erosions, or gastro-oesophageal reflux disease, particularly if his symptoms were to recur in the future.

Impression and Plan

I have provided Carlos with a further prescription for esomeprazole to be used on an as-needed basis.

I would be grateful if you could arrange a surveillance gallbladder ultrasound in 12 months to monitor the adenomyomatosis. If the findings remain stable over a two-year period, we may consider ceasing further surveillance. I have advised Carlos to contact me immediately should he develop any concerning symptoms. He will be reviewed for his gastroscopy in due course, and if the findings are unremarkable, I have suggested he follow up with you directly to discuss the results.
