Summary

- Colonoscopy revealing diverticulosis and internal haemorrhoids.
- Hyperplastic polyp removed with no cancerous potential.
- Normal random colonic biopsies.
- Discharged from regular surveillance.
- No action required by you.

I had the pleasure of conducting a telehealth review with Michael to discuss the results of his recent colonoscopy. You will be pleased to know that the procedure was largely reassuring and did not reveal any significant pathology.

The colonoscopy identified internal haemorrhoids and uncomplicated diverticulosis. Importantly, there was no evidence of active inflammation or diverticulitis. I removed a small polyp which has been histologically confirmed as hyperplastic. This is a benign finding with no malignant potential, and as such, it does not necessitate any specific surveillance.

Furthermore, I took random biopsies of the remaining bowel to screen for any underlying autoimmune or microscopic conditions that might explain his symptoms. These biopsies have all returned as normal. We touched upon Michael’s history of extreme fatigue over the past year; while the colonoscopy has effectively excluded a gastrointestinal cause for this, he was particularly reassured to note the absence of any erythematous patches that had been a concern on previous investigations.

Impression and Plan

Michael is 75. Given his age and the entirely benign findings of this colonoscopy, he does not require further routine endoscopic surveillance. We have agreed to move to an "as-needed" model, where further investigations will only be prompted by a change in his clinical status or the development of new red-flag symptoms.

Yours sincerely,
