Summary

- New onset dysphagia to solids and liquids with associated retrosternal burning and early satiety.
- History of ulcerative colitis, currently stable on Salofalk.
- Urgent gastroscopy scheduled prior to overseas travel.
- Overdue MRI pancreas for surveillance of a previously noted CT abnormality.
- No action required by you

I had the pleasure of reviewing Suat in the clinic today. While his ulcerative colitis remains largely stable on Salofalk, he presented with a distressing 10-day history of new-onset dysphagia. He describes both solids and liquids "holding" in his mid-oesophagus before eventually passing, accompanied by retrosternal burning, excessive eructation, and early satiety. Suat admits to continued smoking and occasional aspirin use for general pain. He is also currently taking tamsulosin for prostatic symptoms. I noted during our consultation that the MRI of his pancreas, which I recommended last year to follow up on a minor CT abnormality, has not yet been performed.

Impression and Plan The acute onset of dysphagia in a smoker who uses aspirin is concerning. While a prior gastroscopy last year was unremarkable, the current symptoms necessitate urgent re-evaluation to exclude an acid-related or aspirin-induced stricture, or more sinister pathology, particularly as he plans to travel to Turkey in three weeks.

I have advised Suat to cease all aspirin and NSAID use immediately. I have also recommended he increase his Nexium to twice daily before meals. I have scheduled an urgent gastroscopy for next Thursday at the Sydenham day centre to ensure we have clarity before he travels. Regarding his pancreas, I have provided a fresh referral for an MRI and have stressed the importance of completing this surveillance.

I will discuss the preliminary findings of the gastroscopy with Suat on the day of the procedure. If the biopsies are benign or show simple reflux-related changes, I will review him formally upon his return from overseas in approximately ten weeks. I have provided him with a new prescription for Salofalk.
